Nomansland

For this part of the investigation we explored the area of Nomansland which is bounded by Ferrers Lane to the south and Down Green Lane to the west, specifically the wooded area. Whilst standing on the road in the woods in the middle of Nomansland (which runs east from Down Green Lane) three of the team reported what sounded like a double thud coming from within the woods in the direction from which we had originally come (to the west-southwest). The area was investigated but nothing was found. Both Gayna and Paul reported that they felt uneasy in the woods, in Gayna's case this was particularly noticeable around the area of an old dirt road making her want to leave quickly. Paul felt as if he was being watched and followed. A distinct cold spot was found near a dirt road which lies in the middle of the wood. By now the night was cold but it was not so in the woods yet this area felt a lot colder with no discernable reason (good tree coverage and no breaks to allow the wind in for instance [we felt no wind]).

Ayot St Lawrence

Nothing to report.

Codicote, St Giles

Nothing to report but we did take one strange photograph. During the time we were there we did not pick up on anything but we did take one very unusual picture which shows a mist over some of the tombstones. The original of this photograph is shown on the right and a close-up of the mist is reproduced below. That night there was no mist anywhere and the air was relatively dry. The direction the camera was pointing was back towards the entrance to the churchyard which lay several metres beyond the gravestones. No one had been in the area where the mist appears prior to the image being taken; no one was near the photographer who was not aware of breathing at the time it was taken.

Bendish

Only thing to report was a cold spot felt along one of the side roads by Gayna. The picture below was taken in the village centre and displays loads of orbs, oddly enough it is the only picture taken over water (a puddle in the road).
